Schools shine in lighthouse project

Three school districts on Whidbey Island stepped out in the community in 2010 to help rebuild the island’s Admiralty Head Lighthouse. This fall, they plan to celebrate when a crane lifts the lantern house their students built onto a 100-year-old stucco-covered brick tower.

The effort has been marked by the tenacity of youth, a local business champion, inter-school cooperation, historic restoration and a lot of old fashioned hard work.

“I’m just blown away,” said Chad Felgar, who teaches metal and woodworking classes at South Whidbey High School. “I had no idea that kids could pull off something like this.”

Felgar and others saw the proof in late June when three separate sections of the lantern house came together. Each section had been fabricated at a separate high school before being joined at South Whidbey. The bottom tub was built at South Whidbey, the middle, curved window frame came from Coupeville’s welding class and teacher Tom Eller, and the spire-pointed top at Oak Harbor.

was completed under the direction of Jerry Mumper.

“This project is a prime example of applied learning, the core of our Career and Technical Education program,” said Rick Schulte, superintendent of the Oak Harbor School District. “Students worked on a real world project which had to meet industry standards, making it much more rigorous than standardized assessments alone can ever do.”

This fall, the unit will be placed atop the lighthouse at Fort Casey. It will replicate a design and look the island community has not seen in more than 80 years.

About 85, or one in seven of South Whidbey’s 500 students, played some role in redoing the lighthouse. There was a broad mix of students, ranging from those heading towards engineering degrees in college to others who hope to quickly get jobs using the vocational skills they learned on the project. A smaller number of students were hard at work in the other two high schools.

“Some students struggle in other courses here at school, and excel in my particular area of classes,” said Felgar. “I have the advanced students teach the newer students, which gives them confidence.”

There was something to do for everyone in this project: design, math, engineering, welding, metallurgy and casting, public relations, machining, and even a bit of historical research.

And just like in the real world, they competed for the jobs.

On a given day, you might have seen a student preparing a PowerPoint for a community presentation, turning custom brass hinge pins on a lathe, or studying the plans for a design that was more than a hundred years old.

The interdisciplinary approach allowed the school to give credits in several subjects for the student work.

The lighthouse was built in 1903, but was decommissioned in 1922. By the 1950s the lantern house was vandalized, dilapidated and leaking. It was replaced by a thin metal structure with Plexiglas. It had no vents, making it insufferably hot in the summer and it was not built to last.

Several years ago, local volunteers met with Archie Nichols, a former co-owner of Nichols Brothers Boat Builders in Freeland. They wanted to know what it would cost to restore the lighthouse. Nichols took the ball and ran. He set in motion a plan to have the three schools do most of the work, with businesses contributing materials and some specialty tasks. The state and others also chipped in some money.

“Archie was really the driving force to make sure we could do this project,” said Eric Nerison, South Whidbey’s Director of Technology during the project. “It was his energy and commitment that made it happen.”

Ten years ago, WSSDA published a report entitled Closing the Achievement Gap: A Policy Action Guide for Washington State’s School Directors.* This report highlighted the readiness gap and early intervention. It discussed questions that school directors should be asking and six policy recommendations to consider. (See pages 36–37 of Closing the Achievement Gap.)

The questions and recommendations are just as important and relevant today as they were in 2002.

What happens in the 0–5 year time frame has a tremendous impact on student achievement in the K–12 system, as well as how much districts need to spend on remediation. Research continues to confirm that an emphasis on early childhood literacy and language skills, kindergarten readiness skills, and social/emotional skills set the stage for student success.

The investment in early childhood learning has a direct impact on closing the achievement gap before a child walks through the door on the first day of kindergarten. It allows districts to use scarce resources for academic purposes beyond helping students get up to grade level.

We have many issues before us in our districts—why should this one be a priority?

Washington state received an early learning Race to the Top grant that provides $60 million over a four-year period. The money will be used to enhance learning for our youngest children. It is important for directors to be aware of what is happening on this issue—which is now referred to as P–3, or pre-school to third grade. There are likely to be activities in your community with policy implications.

The WSSDA Board of Directors will learn more about P–3 at our August retreat by having a study session on this issue. Educating ourselves will help us serve as resources for our colleagues across the state. In addition, there will be several sessions at the WSSDA Annual Conference, November 14–17 in Spokane, that will cover different aspects of P–3, so directors will have an opportunity to learn in-depth about this important topic.

I encourage you to attend at least one of these session offerings as a part of your professional development program during the conference. I also encourage you to take a look at the questions and policy recommendations in the report and find out what your current board and district policies say about P–3 and early learning. You may be surprised at what you find.

We have a chance to make a huge difference for our youngest students before they enter our doors. But to do so, we must be informed and engaged in P–3 conversations. Summer is a great time to learn something new—so take this opportunity to educate yourself about P–3. You will be better equipped to take on the hero work of conquering the achievement gap monster.

WSSDA seeks FRN members

WSSDA is seeking members for its Federal Relations Network (FRN), a component of a nationwide network of school directors under the National School Boards Association.

Washington's FRN members communicate with their members of Congress on education issues. Mailings from NSBA and WSSDA help FRN members stay current on federal education activities.

Many FRN members will travel to Washington, D.C. in February to hear from NSBA experts and meet with their congressional members on education issues. Each member's school district covers the costs of the trip.

Members are appointed by WSSDA's president-elect prior to the Annual Conference, November 14–17. If you are interested in joining FRN, an informational meeting will be held at 7:30 a.m. Saturday, September 22, prior to the Legislative Assembly at the Seattle Airport Marriott.

For more information, contact Marie Sullivan at m.sullivan@wssda.org.

The WSSDA Nominating Committee forwarded three candidates in July for election as officers in the coming year.

The slate includes Mari Taylor of Lake Stevens as a candidate for president-elect and Aurora Flores of Manson and Chris Nieuwenhuis of Riverside for vice president.

Electronic voting will open August 27 and continue through September 28.

Learn more about the candidates

Watch candidate speeches and read candidate bios and statements on our website at www.wssda.org. The nominating committee encourages you to take a few moments to learn more about our candidates and discover what these potential WSSDA leaders have in mind.

Nominations from the floor

In the past, nominations from the floor have been conducted during the WSSDA Annual Conference. This year, because of our new online voting system, we are able to add nominees to the slate through electronic nominations.

If you think there should be additional names on the slate, nominate alternative candidates online between August 1 and August 15 by midnight.

How to nominate alternative candidates

Alternative nominations must be sent to the Nominating Committee Chair, Deborah Heart at deborahheartwssda@gmail.com, and copied to Connie Lauderdale at C.Lauderdale@wssda.org.

To be accepted to the slate, alternative nominees must be nominated by at least one member from five separate school boards, including one member from the nominee’s own board. Please include the nominee’s name, district, and the officer candidate position for which they are being nominated. If these requirements are met, potential candidates will be notified by August 18.

Alternative nominees will be given the opportunity to videotape a speech and submit a candidate statement, bio and photo to be posted on our website no sooner than August 18.

Online voting

Voting will take place online for the first time this year, allowing every board member the opportunity to participate in this important process. Check your email on August 27 for instructions on how to access the electronic ballot.

Do we have your current email address?

Please contact us at mail@wssda.org or 800.562.8927 to make sure we have your current email address in our system. Be sure to include your name, district, email address and contact information. This is critical to timely voting.

20th from 1:00 p.m.–5:00 p.m. Participation is limited to 40 members and district staff.

Many school directors think that only Legislative Representatives (LR) can attend or vote at the Legislative Assembly. While the LR usually serves as the voting delegate, voting credentials may be shared among attending directors at each board’s discretion.

“We hope that every district sends at least one representative to the Assembly this year,” said Rick Jansons, Legislative Committee Chair, Richland. “The legislative agenda is set by those who attend. It’s important to participate so your district’s voice is heard and you have a say in our agenda.”

Attendees have an opportunity to debate and amend the proposals. Each district receives one vote per proposal, although delegates may request a “weighted” vote which allocates a different number of votes per district based on student FTE.

Districts also prioritize their Top 10 proposals, which assist the Board in determining priorities for the 2013 session.

Legislative Assembly: Hot topics

While the agenda isn’t finalized until the end of the month, here’s a peek at the topics we have lined up for the 2012 Legislative Assembly:

• Governor candidates Jay Inslee (Democrat) and Rob McKenna (Republican) – invited
• Legislative panel on Funding Basic Education
• Implementing Common Core Standards
• The State Board of Education New Accountability Index
• Compensation Technical Work Group Recommendations
• State of Education Address by SPI Randy Dorn

Preparing your board for TPEP

Excellent teaching and school leadership is vital for students to achieve their potential. The Teacher and Principal Evaluation Program will provide the opportunity to accomplish both.

Dr. Jonelle Adams, Executive Director of WSSDA, will share her expertise on the components and implementation of TPEP at an upcoming webinar and at several in-person sessions. Adams, a member of the state TPEP steering committee, has developed a solid understanding of the legislation, implementation process and implications for school boards.

On August 14, WSSDA will host a webinar training with Adams as the featured speaker. This is the first in a series of training webinars the association plans to hold on various topics. It will prepare you and your board for TPEP implementation efforts.

Adams will also conduct TPEP workshops at selected locations prior to the regional meetings scheduled from September 25 through October 17. (See schedule on page 7 for more details.)

Participants in the training sessions will understand the major components of TPEP, including legislation, recognize the roles and responsibilities of school boards within the legislation, and possess a clear understanding of the board’s next steps during the 2012–2013 school year.

WSSDA ANNUAL CONFERENCE

New early bird sessions for 2012

Attend one of our early-bird workshops for in-depth learning opportunities during our annual conference. The following early-bird workshops will take place November 14th:

Take it to the Next Level!

Are you a first or second year board member? You have acquired knowledge and skills during your first year and now you are ready to take your boardmanship to the next level. Increase your effectiveness by deepening your understanding of collective bargaining, Open Public Meeting Act, Conflict of Interest, Public Records and how a school board monitors district improvement. The afternoon portion of the session is The Basics of School Finance.

The Basics of School Finance

During your first year or so, you have walked through the district budget process and it is time to understand the bigger picture of school finance. School district funding has changed since 2011, with greater flexibility and greater accountability at the local level. This interactive session gives you practical tools to create best practices regarding budget and avoid future non-sustainable costs.

Communication Strategies: Sessions 1 & 2

Community engagement is an essential responsibility for board members. Session 1 focuses on effective communications related to bonds and levies. Session 2 provides you with practical strategies to build positive relationships with community members, different stakeholder groups, staff and students. Set the stage for collaborative and supportive relationships focused on student achievement.

School districts showcase success during annual tour

BY ELISSA DYSON

WSSDA representatives were impressed in late May when they visited with the eight small school districts as part of the association’s annual small school tour.

The first day included visits to four non-high school districts—Southsound, Pioneer, Grapeview, and Hood Canal.

President Mary Fertakis, Executive Director Jonelle Adams, Training Specialist Colleen Miller, and Task Force on Small Schools Chair Elissa Dyson, talked with administrators and board members. It was clear that each district is unique, but they are united in their desire to prepare their children for high school in Shelton, North Mason and the world beyond.

The second day, the group visited three K–12 districts—South Whidbey, Coupeville, and Mount Baker. They viewed exciting student projects and talked with board members about the challenges their districts face.

The high school metal shop at South Whidbey was a fascinating introduction to a cooperative project to rehabilitate the Admiralty Head Lighthouse. The project was undertaken jointly by the three Whidbey Island school districts (See featured article, page 1).

The last stop was at Conway, a small K–12 district just off of I-5. The visitors engaged in a lengthy discussion with the superintendent and board chair about the changing education landscape.

The team left with a renewed appreciation for the seriousness with which board members and district staff approach their responsibility to educate our children.

These visits were the latest in a total of 107 trips to districts with fewer than 2000 students over the past six years. The information has helped shape association programs to meet the needs of districts of all sizes. The visits have also helped small districts identify resources for board development and school improvement.

WSSDA’s Task Force on Small Schools Issues was first appointed in 2005. It has 10 directors representing eight Director Areas, plus six liaison representatives from WASA, OSPI, AESD, SBE, the Rural Education Center, and the WSSDA Board.
WSSDA has scheduled twelve fall regional meetings for each Director Area across Washington. Our online registration forms for these events will be available soon.

The regional meetings are a great opportunity to network and share information with school directors from around your region and hear presentations on current issues from education leaders.

Meetings will cover a variety of topics, including legislative initiative updates and association updates from WSSDA officers and staff. Detailed agendas will be available online later this summer.

Two-hour TPEP workshops precede most of the regional meetings. Register separately online for the free training.
